As you say, the deontic meaning of duty is "strong necessity or obligation." But the epistemic meaning is something like that, I'm sure. In some contexts, one or another is possible, and there is a formal or real ambiguity: "You can win the prize" can mean "You have the ability to win the prize" or "I don't know if you win the prize." But with the perfect past "must have", it usually makes sense only the epistemic reading: "I don't have to have X" usually means "I have to say that he definitely didn't do X", or "I'm sure he didn't do X."
